THE FALSE FRIEND.

BY H. F. G.

"So provoking that I should cut my hand to-day, of all the days in the world!" said Myra Gordon. "And Philip Howard is so jealous—and he'll never forgive me if that weekly letter does not come."

"Dear Helen, would it be asking too much if I were to beg you to write a few lines to my dictation?" Helen Forrester laid down her book.

"I will do it for you with pleasure, Myra," said she.

And she opened a little rosewood desk, clasped with silver and lined with cherry velvet, that was usually placed on the marqueterie stand between the two windows.

Helen Forrester was an heiress—a tall, dark-eyed girl, not exactly beautiful, but possessing, nevertheless, a face of rare interest.

Myra Gordon was her school friend, the eldest of nine penniless girls, who had hailed an invitation to spend the winter in the city with Miss Forrester with the greatest delight.

"One has no opportunities in a horrid little country hole like this," said Myra. "and although I am not vain, I know very well that opportunity is all I lack to make a good match."

And really the self-satisfied little speech was not unpardonable, when one looked at the reflection of Myra Gordon's rose-leaf cheeks, her wealth of golden hair, and eyes of larkspur blue, in the opposite mirror.

So Myra came to the city, and Miss Forrester, in the sisterly generosity of her heart, bought dresses, jewels, and pretty trinkets innumerable for the young beauty, who had only one memento, a dyed blue silk, and a set of old fashioned garnets, that had belonged to her grandmother.

"Because," said Helen, "I want her to look as lovely as she can."

Miss Forrester's boudoir was very bright and cheerful in the golden March sunshine that morning, with its draperies of rose satin, its carpet of pearl-gray velvet, and its low easy chairs of pearl velvet, puffed and tasseled with pink silk, and Myra in her morning wrapper of white cashmere, with only a blue ribbon fllet in her curls, looked peerlessly pretty as she knelt beside the arm of Helen's chair.

"And how shall I begin this letter to your lover, Myra?" said Helen, laughing. "Writing love-letters is a new occupation for me."

"My own darling," of course," dictated Myra, with an arch toss of the golden curls. "I need not tell you how dearly and truly I love you still, even though you reproach me for my long silence. But—Oh, mercy, what's that? A ring at the door? Give me the paper quick!"

And Myra swept the incipient love-letter into her pocket, as the page in buttons announced—
"Mrs. Hamilton Todd and the Misses Hamilton Todd."

And when the family of Hamilton Todd had taken their tardy leave, Myra declared that they would finish the letter some other time.
"For see, dear," she said, "I have to arrange my dress with Celine for this evening's ball. One naturally likes to look as well as one can, don't one?"

"And, of course, you will be a little particular about your own dress, since Rupert Clayton is to be there."

And she darted a little mischievous optical arrow from her blue eyes to Helen's conscious face.

For Myra Gordon, who had that instinctive quickness of apprehension which we are apt to credit the lower animals with possessing, had not been slow to perceive that Mr. Rupert Clayton admired the heiress, and that Miss Forrester always blushed and became a little confused when Mr. Clayton entered her presence.

"Exactly," said Miss Myra to herself. "But because Helen Forrester has heretofore fallen heir to all the good things of the world, it does not follow that she always will. Rupert Clayton is rich and handsome. He suits me; and as for that bread-and-butter love affair with Philip Howard, why, let it slip down the wind. It was all very well by way of amusing one's self, but of course its nothing serious."

So Myra Gordon went to the ball that night in floating white tulle and glistening pale blue silk, and secretly congratulating herself on looking twenty times as handsome as the heiress.

"Helen has nice eyes, and a sweet smile enough," thought she, "but when her countenance is not animated she looks cold and statue-like. Men admire life, and color, and vivacity."

The evening was half over when Myra Gordon found herself leaning on Mr. Clayton's arm, flushed and breathless from a walk.

"It looks so delightfully cool and deserted in yonder conservatory," said Myra, lifting her heaven-blue eyes to her cavalier's face. "Do let us go there for a few minutes."

Mr. Clayton cast rather a wistful glance towards that particular quarter of the room where Helen Forrester had been sitting a minute or two before.

"Oh, I know what you are thinking about!" said Myra, artlessly. "It is of Helen that I want to speak to you."

"Here is a delicious spot, among the ferns and tropical grasses, and there's a fountain hidden somewhere here, for I can feel the freshness and coolness of the spray."

"Yes," said Mr. Clayton a little absently.

"About Mr. Forrester?"
"Oh!" said Myra, sweetly. "Yes, I am going to speak of dear Helen's engagement."

"Miss Forrester engaged?"
Rupert's face had grown pale as marble in the silvery way lights that alone illuminated the conservatory.

"Yes; didn't you know it? To a gentleman in Liverpool. But dear Helen is like all other girls—with a light, rippling laugh—she likes to break as many hearts as possible."

"I think, Miss Gordon, you must be misinformed!" said Clayton, hurriedly.

"No, I'm not," said Myra, with a little aromatic sigh.

"Look here!"

And she drew from her pocket the fragment of a letter that Helen had written at her dictation that morning.

"I found it lying on her desk," said she. "Of course you know Helen's curious, angular writing?"

"And I really think, Mr. Clayton—with a sympathetic quiver in her voice—"that—that it is wrong to mislead a noble heart like yours! Oh, Mr. Clayton, if I were in Helen's place—But what have I said?"

And Myra sank back on her seat with a very perfect imitation of a blush.

"Miss Gordon," faltered the bewildered listener, "is it possible that—"

"Yes," fluttered Myra, not so entirely obscured behind the pocket handkerchief but that she was able to steadily observe the face of Rupert Clayton. "I love you; I can appreciate your noble nature, if Helen Forrester cannot. Do not despise me for what I have said. Indeed I cannot help it!"

"Despise me?"
Rupert Clayton was silent a second or two, then he took Myra's hand in his.

"Myra, I cannot promise to be a very enthusiastic lover; but if you care to accept me, I will do my best to be a true and faithful husband to you."

It was a cold wooing enough, to say the truth, for Rupert Clayton cared little just then whether he lived or died.

The words written in Helen's hand seemed to burn in upon his brain. If she was false, the whole world seemed out of joint.

But Myra cared little for that. She had won the high stake for which she had played.

And when the engaged pair left the conservatory, the fountain tinkled on, and the palms waved softly in the perfumed air, and the white light of the clustered candles fell on a pale, agonized face, half hidden by the blossoming banks of azaleas—the face of Helen Forrester.

She left town the next morning to pay a long-promised visit to an aunt at Scarborough.

Too proud to remonstrate, too bitterly wounded to plead her own cause, she left the coast clear for Myra's own purposes.

And Miss Gordon returned to her home and the eight sisters, to get her trousseau ready as quickly as might be.

"Helen might have stayed in town a little while longer to accommodate me," said she, plaintively, "but she was always selfish!"

Five years afterwards.

The scene, a white stretch of glittering beach at Scarborough, with a glorious August sun turning the billows to sheets of diamond spray, and Helen Forrester slowly walking up and down the esplanade, found herself suddenly face to face with a tall, bronzed stranger.

"Helen!" he exclaimed, pausing abruptly.

"Mr. Clayton!"

She, too, started and grew pale.

"Helen, why do you speak so coldly? Have you forgotten the past?"

"It is because I have not forgotten the past that I speak as I do," said Miss Forrester, quietly. "I hope you will be wiser."

"I have no wife," Clayton answered passionately. "She died in Venice a year ago; but not before she had lost all claim to my love by confessing to me how she had deceived me about you—not before she had forfeited all claim to my respect by eloping with another man. Helen, all this belongs to the past—my present is in your hands."

"How do you mean, 'in your hands?'" she faltered.

"I love you, Helen; I have never loved any woman but you. Can you forget the past, dearest, and trust me for the future?"

And so Helen Forrester began her new life on that brilliant August day at Scarborough, with the green waves breaking over the beach, and the white sails gliding afar off against the horizon; and treacherous Myra, lying low in her foreign grave, had learned by dire experience that "the way of the transgressor is hard," for there are few webs in this world so tangled but that Heaven straightens them out at last.

A WONDERFUL SHOWING.—In conversation with Mr. John Mackay last evening we gained an idea of what a mine Consolidated Virginia was, and the future prospect, are as good now as ever. Mr. Mackay says she has produced $28,000,000, a sum larger than any other mine in the United States. Of this amount $28,000,000 has been disbursed to stockholders, and yet the San Francisco Chronicle claims bad management. During the past year $451,000 was paid for State, county and city taxes; $900,000 was expended for machinery, etc., on the C. & C. shaft, the discount on silver was one million and a half. Just think of it! Wells, Fargo & Co. received $110,000 for transporting the bullion. And Mr. Mackay says that to day of the 1,000 men employed, the average daily wages is $4 50.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—Mr. Newcomb of Winnemucca Valley, met with a serious accident yesterday, caused by his team running away and crashing him between the wagon and a fence. We learn from the messenger who came for the doctor that he had his ribs and collar bone broken and was injured internally. Dr. Bergman is in attendance.

JUDICIAL DISTRICT.—The Board of Trade grappled the Judicial segregation question last night, and Messrs. Haydon, Varian, Boardman, Knox, Duck, Beck and others participated in the debate. The lawyers favored and the merchants opposed. The question was continued for further hearing until next Saturday evening.

NEW PAPER.—The first copy of the Republican, the new Eureka paper, has come to hand. It looks nice and reads nice, and we wish it abundant success. Eureka is large enough to support two papers, and we hope the Republican will secure its share of the public patronage.

BELOW TO SCHOOL.—Lisle Jamison went to Sacramento last night, where he will attend the Sacramento Business College for a year. We hope the young man will exert himself and return to us with great wisdom. He has the making of a smart man, has Lisle.

AMONG THEIR CONSTITUENTS.—Senators Ross and Boardman, and Assemblymen Everett and Shoemaker returned home yesterday, as the Legislature had adjourned over until to-morrow.

THE "week of prayer" will be observed at the Methodist Church by holding prayer meetings every evening throughout the week. Appropriate services to-day.

WANTED.—Furnished rooms with or without board in a private family where there are no other boarders. Address, C. W., this office.

INCORPORATION.—The incorporation bill will come up again before the Board of Trade on Tuesday evening.

District Court will be in session to-morrow. Grand and trial jurors are reminded to be present and answer to their names.

OUR POPULATION.—The total number of males in the State is, according to the census, 33,680; females, 14,508.

BONANZA KING.—John Mackay, the Bonanza King, came down on the Virginia train last night, going to San Francisco.

The stock market was a trifle better yesterday. And still prices are very low.

The new Baptist minister, S. J. Arnold, preaches his first sermon to day.

C. J. Brookins & Co. have 200 boxes of Honey Lake apples at $2 per box.

The case of S. Buckley vs. A. Buckley, Administrator, will come up in the Supreme Court on the 16th.

We notice that Ralph Osburn has returned from Oregon. He reports having had a pleasant trip.

GRANGERS.—The farmers were here in force yesterday to attend the Grange meeting, and to witness the installation of officers.

A LARGE AND BEAUTIFUL STOCK OF GOODS.—C. J. Brookins has just received in store a large and beautiful stock of holiday goods of every description, all of which he will sell cheap. He has photographic albums of all sizes and prices, and all kinds of musical instruments; dolls, cups and saucers, spoons, knives and forks, and everything else, almost, for children, and a thousand and one things of elegant make and pattern for adults. Brookins' is the place to get your holiday goods; your presents for your wives, daughters, sons and friends. Call and see his stock. It will cost you nothing if you don't buy.

MERCHANT TAILOR.—M. Raphael has secured his old quarters on Virginia street, for the purpose of again pursuing his calling. Gentlemen wishing the latest styles of suits are respectfully invited to give him an order. All kinds of repairing done at short notice.

WANTED.—A woman or girl to do general housework, a number one situation. Apply immediately at this office.

HOUSE TO RENT.—Containing six rooms. Enquire of J. D. Shaw, Western Hotel.

SELLING OUT.—Mrs. L. M. Chase is determined to close out, regardless of price, her large and varied assortment of dry goods and miscellaneous articles. Now is the time to buy cheap goods.

"ONE GOOD TURN DESERVES ANOTHER."—The above adage is most applicable to Messrs. Grey & Isaacs, dry goods merchants, Virginia street. Seeing since they have come amongst us, ladies have discovered to their joy that the prices in dry goods have fallen to one-half their original price, and still they tumble, as Grey & Isaacs are determined to still continue to lead the dry goods trade of Reno, and with that aim in view they have marked down their entire stock to enable them to clear out all their winter goods, so now is your opportunity ladies to buy dry goods at your own price, at the same time showing your appreciation for their past acts.

AGENT.—Mr. W. J. Marsh has been appointed local agent for Reno of the well known musical house of Sherman & Hyde, of San Francisco. Therefore Mr. Marsh can sell you pianos, etc., on the same terms you obtain them below.

Something About the Origin of a Grand Old Tune.

This unique psalm tune first appeared in John Calvin's "French Psalter," published at Geneva in 1543, as the "proper tune" to the 131st Psalm. Guillaume Frano was musical editor of this work. He was a master in music, yet all that will be found in ordinary musical history regarding him is that he was an "obscure musician of Strasbourg of the sixteenth century." The church owes him not a few of her sweet melodies. A melody in Luther's great psalter, published from 1524 to 1560, seems to have suggested the ideas of this inimitable choral. One of Luther's hymns of eight unequal lines, which was set to a melody of the Moravian or Waldensian early church contains the elements of the Old Hundredth. But these were reset and remodeled by Franc, who left Strasbourg and became "centaur" or preceptor to Theodore Beza, at Lausanne. He subsequently settled and died at Geneva, leaving as his imperishable monument the music of the "French Psalter." The music was afterwards adapted to the hundredth Psalm in the first "English Psalter" ever published, edited by John Calvin, and printed for the use of the English-speaking refugees at Geneva in 1536, of which at that time John Knox was minister. The musical editor of this psalter was Claude Goudimel, of Rome, who suffered martyrdom at Lyons at the time of the massacre of St. Bartholomew's Day because he had set the English psalms to music. This Genevan-English psalter was reprinted in 1533-4 by "John Day, over the pump in Aldgate," and Andrew Hart, in Edinburgh, and laid the foundation of the psalmody of the Protestant church of the world. The words of this psalter contained first 37 psalms written by Sternhold and Hopkins, the remainder being written by 10 of the refugees at Geneva. William Keith, from Aberdeen, wrote the Hundredth Psalm. This psalter, words and music, was for some time universally used by the Protestant churches of England and Scotland. When Oliver Cromwell got the Westminster general assembly of divines to prepare a new version of the psalms in common metre, for the use of the churches, the parliament sanctioned it, the English church at once adopted it, but the Scottish people rebelled on the ground that they had already a better psalter of their own. Cromwell had to come to a compromise with the hardy Scots. (The only other compromise he ever made in his life was with Cameron of Lochiel, when he and his army got bewildered in the wilds of Lochaber.) This compromise was that in Scotland a number of their favorite psalms from the old psalter might be published as second editions. This was done, and the music is thus called "old"—the Old First, Old Forty-fourth, Old Hundredth, Old Hundred and Thirty-fourth, Old Hundred and Thirty-seventh, etc. These old psalms are still sung in all Scottish churches, and the music of them (which, with the exception of the Old Hundredth, had long fallen into disuse) has been recently revived. Dr. Munzer, who characterized it as the finest psalmody of any age or any country, was one of the first who called attention to it, and now it is fast becoming the most appreciated and popular among the people. Many of the tunes will be found in the revised edition of the "Scottish Psalms," all of them with the "old" words in Day's or Knox's old psalters.—Ec.

RAILROAD ENTERPRISES.

An Effort to be Made to Open Up the Southeastern Portion of the State.

Within the confines of this State, in a southeasterly direction, there is a vast stretch of country which is becoming of considerable interest. Its known wealth in precious metals and equally known adaptability to the growth of cereals, together with its proximity to the wood and timber regions of the Sierra Nevada combine to invest the question of its development with considerable interest. Were a railroad to be built from Carson south through the valley to Wellington, on West Walker river, thence to Aurora and Columbus, in Esmeralda county, an agricultural and mining portion of Nevada would be developed which would nearly, if not quite, double the amount of taxable property, while it would prove a very remunerative investment. It is not strange, there, therefore, that there should be found on this coast capitalists willing to expend the required amount of money in order to secure the reward which would inevitably follow the expenditure. For some time past a report has been current to the effect that a party of capitalists headed by D. O. Mills, of San Francisco, were about to ask the Legislature for a charter to enable them to build a road from Carson to Aurora, and further south, but nothing definite is known in this respect. A step in this direction has recently been taken by the Virginia and Truckee Railroad Company, and there is a likelihood that a portion, at least, of the desired road will be built. A new division of the Virginia and Truckee Railroad has been surveyed and located from Carson to Genoa. It will be sixteen miles in length; it will run 1800 feet east of the main street in Genoa, and will pass directly in front of Walley's Springs. It will therefore at the immediate base of the mountains, and will lie as convenient as possible to the wood and timber flumes. The estimates preparatory to the commencement of the work are now being made.—Va. Chronicle.
